@designlovest

Bri Emery, a creative director and the founder of designlovest.com, finds frequent inspiration in tropical locales.

KEY PIECES

I rely on things that are dual-purpose: dresses I can toss over a swimsuit and wear to dinner, a pair of sandals that works from day to night, and a straw bag I can use as a beach tote or take into town.

PACKING STRATEGY

Lay everything out before it goes into your bag. Otherwise you'll lose track and end up with too much (or forget a necessity). Remember: Less is more. Your bag will be lighter and easier to repack if you edit.

PRO TIP

Don't bring too many shoes—you won't need them at the beach!

@andnorth

An N.Y.C. resident, Emma Tuccillo started her travel guide andnorth.com
after being inspired by her weekend escapes to rural upstate New York.

KEY PIECES

A staple skirt or pants that work with different tops, depending on the weather,
are important, plus a pair of Keds—you can wear them with anything, and if they get wet, they'll dry quickly.

PACKING STRATEGY

For my weekend trips,
I bring only what
I can fit in my backpack. To maximize space, I roll my clothes
and wear the bulkiest
items if possible.

PRO TIP

Dirt paths can be tricky to navigate with a suitcase, but you can take a backpack
anywhere.

City Sightseeing

HIT THE TOWN IN SMART, STYLISH STAPLES—AND COMFY SHOES.

@oneikathe traveller

Writer Oneika Raymond chronicles her wanderlust (she's visited more than 95 countries!) at oneikathetraveller.com.

KEY PIECES

I always bring three pairs of shoes for urban exploring: sneakers for walking; a versatile, dressier option; and flip-flops for the hotel (especially if it has a pool). Another must-have: a day-to-night little black dress.

PACKING STRATEGY

Use a "nesting" approach. I roll my clothes, then stuff smaller things, like socks, underwear, and accessories, into larger items, like shoes.

PRO TIP

Don't think in terms of individual outfits. Instead, stick to a color scheme, like black-and-white with pops of color. You can mix and match to get more out of fewer pieces.
